

You and Your Child Can Learn to Manage Anxiety!

EVEN DURING TOUGH TIMES, YOU CAN BRING ON THE CALM

Children have fears, worries and sadness as they grow up. This is normal. But, if those feelings are frequent, your child may have anxiety. You can learn the symptoms, and how to address them.

Spot the signs

Anxiety can show up in different ways, including:

- Trouble with sleep, mood swings and irritability
- Lack of focus, confidence or presence in daily situations
- Frequent headaches, upset stomach or lack of appetite
- Fear of time (or distance) away from a parent or caregiver
- Fear that something bad will happen
- Fear of dogs, people, bugs, places and objects
- Refusal to go to school

Everyone has their own sense of anxiety, and your child may feel only some of these things. What matters is that your child can share concerns with you and get help.

Get support

Anxiety can have many causes, so let your doctor know what's going on. It's not always easy for kids to express their feelings. They may feel afraid to tell another person about concerns or issues.

The doctor may suggest your child visit with a therapist. That could open a safe place for your child to talk about their fears and worries. Plus, you and your child can get important tools and life skills.
